Trauma Team Workshop

Emotional Resilience of Victims: How Rescue Services Can Support Mental Well-Being in Crisis Situations

Matija Kranjčević, bacc.therap.occup., Instructor of Rescue Medicine (CMRS)

The role of rescue services goes beyond technical interventions, as timely support and understanding of psychological needs become a key factor in safeguarding the mental health of victims. A sense of safety, the warmth of human contact, and simple words of encouragement can often ease the initial shock and reduce stress levels. Such an approach lowers the risk of long-term consequences, strengthens resilience, and promotes faster recovery after a traumatic event.

Psychological First Aid – Support for People in Crisis

Dunja Radauš, HVZ

Psychological First Aid is a practical and compassionate approach to supporting individuals affected by crises, disasters, or traumatic events. It aims to promote safety, calm, connection, and hope by offering comfort, reducing stress, connecting people to resources and support, and promoting self-care and community resilience. Firefighters often engage with individuals in acute emotional distress during emergency interventions. The ability to de-escalate emotional distress in individuals and communicate effectively can significantly enhance the outcome of the firefighter's response and help maintain psychological resilience in the face of stressful situations.
